How About This?

A very prominent and enthusiastic Liberal in Crossfield has stated that he is contemplating the purchase of an aeroplane for use in campaign work in the coming election. The Liberal party as a body is progressive, hence reciprocity.

our aeroplane is really the latest.
If it was another man we might think this gentleman was going up to escape the hot air that is bound to be in evidence for the next few weeks, but we all know that this gentleman can do his share in this line, and is going to have a little bit of the best of his opponents and speak to the people from on high.

Another Successful Year For Western Canada College
Calgary

This well known Resident and Day College for Boys has just closed
another very successful year.

The attendance has steadily increased and the total registration for the year is 150 boys between the ages of ten and twenty. Many of these students have written the June mar-trication examinations for Alberta and McGill Universities. The results of the McGill examinations
just received are very gratifying,

one had taking 6th place in all Canada in a large field of candidates.
The results of the examinations for the Royal Military College held for Western Canada College have just been issued, and a Western Canada College boy has taken the highest marks in Western Canada.

During the year the Staff was increased.
The most important addition, however, has been in the Gymnasium.
This building has been fitted up in the latest and best manner under the care of an expert. A special instructor from Cambridge University, England, has been engaged.

His whole time is given to the training and instruction of the boys.
Their First Annual Gymnastic Exhibition or Assant at Arms was a great surprise to parents and friends. The College continues its success in sending its boys to the Universities and into the various leading business houses. The College authorities are making preparations to sell the present property and move to the new College premises. It will take some time, of course, to perfect plans and erect buildings on the new property of thirty-five acres, but no expense will be spared to get the most improved, the best equipped and most sanitary buildings, both for Residence and Class Room requirements.

The College will need all these improvements, for it is the oldest, the largest and the best known College of its kind in Canada west of the lakes. It was founded before Alberta and Saskatchewan became Provinces, and its record of success in preparing lads for College and Business is amply testified by the high places taken, the scholarships won, and the testimonials received.

Tenders Wanted

TENDERS will be received by the underigned up to 12 o'clock noon, September 1st, 1911, for the erection of a frame school house and closets, situated

West of the 5th Meridian.

Plans and Specifications can be seen at Hultgren & Davie's Office, Crossfield.
Building to be completed by October 15th, 1911.

Every tender must be accompanied by a certified cheque of one tenth of their tender as a guarantee of good faith.
Said cheque will be returned if the tender is not accepted.

The lowest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

Dated at Crossfield, this 15th day of August, 1911.

Mr. Raddason

Or,
The Mystery of the Jade Ring

By Clarissa Mackie

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

When Detective Fenn was called to the Raddason residence for the second time within three months he smiled knowingly under the whim of his slouch hat. All the way up town he was recalling the incident of the lost jewel box and the simple solution of the mystery. If it proved the millionaire to evade plots for the detective to untangle—why, Mr. Fenn was perfectly willing so long as Mr. Raddason was willing to pay the fee.

"The first fee bought a bond in the country; perhaps the next one will furnish an automobile," chuckled the detective as he emerged from the subway and walked the short block to the Raddason town residence.

"Good morning, Mr. Fenn," smiled the millionaire as the detective entered. "What is it now—another robbery?"

"Yes. A valuable ring which I had just purchased disappeared from this table while my son was here."

"The detective was instantly alert. "When did it happen, sir?"

"Last evening about 11 o'clock. I will begin at the moment when I stepped into Flicker's and bought the ring. I had been waiting for some time, for it was ground under the history said it was the favorite finger ring of one of the emperors of the Ming dynasty. The workmanship was exquisite, with the delicate carving of the Chinese artisan. The ring was formed of carved ivory, and the setting was a perfect work of art. The jade with a dragon carved upon it."

"Flicker said put a pretty steep price on it, and I had been beating him down until just before he met my offer. I sent him a check for the amount, and I stopped in there last evening on my way to the club and got the ring. I dined at the club and went to the theater afterward. When I got home I took the ring out and put it on the table. I was alone away to remove my overcoat, and as I approached the table to examine the jade ring I saw that it had vanished. I have not seen it since, nor can I find any trace of its whereabouts. It's up to you to find it for me."

Detective Fenn hung aside his cigar and twisted his fingers thoughtfully. "Anybody know you had purchased the ring?" he inquired.

Mr. Raddason shook his head. "No one except Flicker."

"Who let you to the house last night, Mr. Raddason?"

"My butler, James Gammon."

"Was he in the library after you entered the room?"

"I believe he came in to close a window or something, but not for long, as well as tell me, Mr. Fenn, that I still hate James Gammon from the time a man who has the face of a bulldog and a dollar's worth of gold and silver plate is not going to sell himself for a trashy looking Chinese ring."

"Who was not out of the room when you were looking at the thing a second time?"

"You were alone in the room?"

"I've been in here ever since I came home last night. I wouldn't stir from the place until something had been done about recovering the ring. I slept there last night. No one entered the room from the time I returned last night until you came in fifteen minutes ago."

"Jade rings don't vanish into thin air even if they are hundreds of years old," remarked Mr. Fenn, drawing upon his knee and examining the ring under the table. "I suppose you think may be one of those old mine emeralds that hang around in the family?"

Mr. Raddason smiled sheepishly. "I admit that the family has a probability of that happening. Mr. Fenn, I've heard of some very queer happenings in connection with those old mine rings. I may as well say I've crawled all over the floor and I can't find a trace of the thing. I feel mighty uncomfortable over the matter."

Detective Fenn was drawing down the room, peering under chairs and tables and bookcases, turning up the corners of rugs, poking into every crevice and cranny that might afford a hiding place for the jade ring. He hopped down into the crevices of the leather chairs without result. At last he emerged, hot and dusty, to resume his seat at the table. There he lighted another cigar and prepared himself a glass of pink soda water.

"Nevertheless I would like to question James Gammon, Mr. Raddason," he said after a few minutes' pause. "At the risk of my losing the best servant I ever had in my employ," commented Mr. Raddason as he rang the bell. Instantly James Gammon was before them, tall, pale, sleek and very deferential.

"James," said Mr. Raddason kindly, "something has been lost from this room, and I have called Mr. Fenn to try to unravel the matter for me. As you were here last evening when I returned home, Mr. Fenn thinks you might be able to help us out."

"Yes, sir," said the butler in rather an uncertain voice. "Of course I don't know anything about it, but I am concluded honestly."

"Of course not of course not. Still, I can give you some suggestions to tell him whether the doors and windows had been open or closed during the evening and whether some one might have been sneaked in the room when I returned home from the theater."

"By the way, what play did you go to see last night, Mr. Raddason?" asked the detective.

The millionaire paused and stilled a thoughtfully. His forehead creased in a puzzled form that deepened as the minutes passed. "I'm blessed if I can tell you, Fenn," he said at last. "I mean to some other every night this week, and I can't remember which one I did go to see last night."

"I beg your pardon, sir," ventured the butler meekly, "but you told me you had been to the annual dinner of the Trout Club."

"Poo! You're dreaming, James," remarked Mr. Raddason uneasily. "What else did I say last night, eh?"

James looked exceedingly uncomfortable, and yet there was a malicious gleam in his little dark eye. He hesitated until his master repeated impatiently:

"What else did I say, James?"

The butler coughed deprecatingly, and then he began to repeat the information that Mr. Raddason had called him into the library to look at a little ring, a fine, carved ivory ring, as he said was perched on the table.

"And what did you see there, James?" demanded his master kindly.

"I didn't see anything, sir," said the butler uncomfortably.

"You may go, James, and I recommend that you call on some of the champagne for your daily ration. I guarantee you won't see any ringed green dragons or anything else."

Mr. Raddason waved an impatient hand, and the butler went reluctantly from the room. His last look was at the jade ring.

The detective and the millionaire looked at each other. The butler crooked a beaming finger at him as he disappeared.

By the way, you didn't get a chance to question James after all," remarked Mr. Raddason. "Perhaps he doesn't make any difference, though, as the fellow seems to be rather rattled about something or other. I don't know what he meant by the Trout Club dinner."

Mr. Fenn took the morning newspaper from the table and scanned the pages curiously. Presently his gaze became fixed, and he read for several moments before he laid the paper down.

"I'd like to use the telephone for a moment, Mr. Raddason," he said.

"Where shall I find you?"

"In the hall; James will show you."

Reason touched the bell, and James appeared, and in response to Mr. Fenn's request he led the detective down the long hall to the telephone booth. Before the detective picked up the receiver he had a short conversation with the butler.

"When the detective returned to the library he found Mr. Raddason in the act of swallowing a headache powder.

"Had a beastly headache all the morning," he complained. "I got to think about that confounded ring and wondering where it had gone to."

"Don't worry any longer, Mr. Raddason," said the detective calmly. "The ring has been found."

"Found?" exclaimed Mr. Raddason excitedly. "You don't mean to say James?"

"James is quite innocent, sir, in fact, everybody's quite quiet. I can give you a little story of your evening and what followed. First, you intended to stop at Flicker's and get your jade ring, but as you had an engagement to attend the Trout Club's annual dinner you did not stop for the ring, and it has not been lost in your possession."

"Why—why—what do you mean, Fenn?" spluttered Mr. Raddason warily.

"I just called Mr. Flicker on the telephone, and he says you haven't been after the ring yet. If you will look at this morning's newspaper you will see an account of the Trout Club's dinner and also mention of the fact that Mr. Raddason missed a famous piece of his own invention, called ringed green dragon punch, Mr. Raddason. It seems it is composed of soda water, steam, lime in powder, lime, old MSG, wine and various other ingredients. If you will pardon me, sir, enough fireworks to make a fire. I can give you a little story of your evening and what followed. First, you intended to stop at Flicker's and get your jade ring, but as you had an engagement to attend the Trout Club's annual dinner you did not stop for the ring, and it has not been lost in your possession."

"Do you mean to say that I was—er—affected by that punch of your concoction?" asked the millionaire in a horror-struck voice. "Why, Mr. Fenn, I've never been in that condition in my life."

"I understand that you never have been before, but I took the liberty of inquiring concerning your movements last night. Several of the guests whose names I marked told me that you were not feeling well and went home at 10:30. That's all, I believe, sir," said the detective, rising from his chair. "The ring has not yet been called for."

Mr. Raddason sat in thoughtful silence for some time. "James is a good fellow and of impeccable character, as I've already told you, Mr. Fenn," he said, with a whimsical smile. "I wonder what I owe him." He drew a checkbook toward him and filled in a check and gave it to the detective, with a very smile.

"One on me, Mr. Fenn. I'll catch you yet, though," he threatened.

The detective chuckled. "I'm away with a satisfied chuckle. I'm a temperance man myself, sir," he murmured. "That ringed green dragon punch of yours has served me a good turn today."

Frost & Wood
No. 3 Binder
does Better Work

Because of the Eccentric Eccentric Wheel the No. 3 Binder makes a neater, more tightly compressed bundle and saves considerable time. Discharges the bundle faster, too, than the ordinary binder. Remember, no other binder has the Eccentric Eccentric Wheel. Neither is any other binder so light in draft. At all points where there is a possibility of friction occurring the makers of No. 3 Binder have provided Large Roller Bearings.
That's why the Frost & Wood
No. 3 runs so smoothly and easily—one reason why it gives so many more years of service.
Another reason for its great durability is the strong, powerful construction of its back bone,
which we would like to explain to you fully. Drop in at your earliest convenience and talk it over with us. We are confident that the Frost & Wood No.
3 is the binder for you. Give us a chance to prove it.

Frost & Wood
No. 8 Mower

Cut your crop of grass with the Frost & Wood No. 8 Mower this season. Because it is built on the Internal Gear principle, No. 8 will do the work faster and more satisfactorily than an ordinary mower.

TIGER RAKE

Use the Tiger Rake for raking your
hay. The teeth are curved exactly right to pick up everything the mower cuts. You can dump it by foot or hitch. Tiger is durable as well as sure-working, being all steel except tooth roll and shafts. Be sure and see these Frost & Wood Haying machines. Call on us right away.
